Word Encounters

We encounter new words every day. When we watch movies, read books, and listen to others speak - we constantly come across words and ideas. Since we encounter so many words, it is important that we become self-directed learners when it comes to acquiring vocabulary. This means recognizing new words, writing them down, learning what they mean, and incorporating them into our writing and speech.

For the following activity, you need to document two new words you encounter each week and fill out the blanks below.
