What is Your Greatest Strength?

So here is your question: what is your greatest strength? Is it your compassion for others? Is it your patience? Is it your work ethic? What about your organization skills?

Now when you write about your greatest strength, be sure your answer is not generic. Remember, you are an individual, and your greatest strength is unique to you.

If your greatest strength is your work ethic, don't just say that you meet deadlines and always give it your all. Be specific about how and why you have the work ethic that you do. Perhaps your grandfather was an immigrant from the Philippines, and worked his tail off to start a life in the United States. And now you--grateful for his hard work and sacrifice--want to build upon the legacy he created.

Or maybe your greatest strength is your mechanical skills. You have a knack for fixing and building things. If this is the case, describe why you feel the urge to work with your hands. Do you enjoy problem solving? Do you enjoy using your gift to help others?

once again, here is your question: What is your greatest strength?
